My Contribution

I was able to contribute to the group in a couple of helpful ways. The first was serving as the project coordinator, but we all were able to help coordinate the project on some level. I set up the GitHub and wrote up the proposal to get us set on the right direction. From there once we started working on the main part of the project I helped in the data exploration, namely the variables in the data set about violation codes and inspection types. I also preformed hypothesis testing on the genre variable, and helped draw up some other exploration information for the presentation. I also set up the presentation, designing the theme and typing up the slides. My team mates helped edit them and correct some of the small mistakes and oversights I had. All in all, I think I was able to help my team in some very useful ways and was a significant asset in pushing us towards our final product.
